

Saint Patrick's Day.

"Chosen leaf
Of bard and chief.

Old Erin's native Shamrock.
Monday was, as one joyous son of the Emerald Isle said, the seventeenth of Ireland, St. Patrick's day in the mornin', and it was observed extensively in San Angelo by the wearing of the green. Some were so fortunate as to have the real Shamrock from the beloved sod to pin upon their coats. Those not so fortunate contented themselves with green ribbon, while many sported the artificial Shamrock, dispensed by the Raphael Clothing Co.

To the pious Irish heart the Shamrock represents the Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Ghost; and mothers tell their children the story of the modest three-leaved little emblem and what it represents.

St. Patrick used it to illustrate to the pagans of old the unity of the Trinity, how three can be one. They were also told that it represents Faith, Hope and Charity, that it was blessed by St. Patrick, and that no serpent will touch it.

Many a pair of loyal lips, on St. Patrick's day, kissed the leaves of the Shamrock, and from the hearts of the scattered children of Erin went up the prayer, "God Save Ireland."

The good people of San Angelo are to be congratulated upon the acquisition of Mr. Roby to their business interests; and will find him clever, accurate and reliable. We hope to see him achieve the success his merits deserve in his new home.—Kosciusko, (Miss.) Herald.

JOHN W. DUNN.

John W. Dunn died at his room on Twelfth avenue, Sunday afternoon about three o'clock. He had been in failing health for several months, and last winter went to Mexico where he spent some time, but without much benefit. During the last three months his decline in health has been rapid, and the sad ending which came Sunday was not unexpected.

The funeral took place Monday at 3:30 o'clock p. m. from the Catholic church, and a large concourse of friends, among them being the members of the San Angelo Turn Verein, followed the remains to their last resting place in the Silent City.

John W. Dunn was born and reared in St. Louis and eight years ago came to San Angelo, engaging in the saddlery and harness business with his father. At the time of his death he was secretary and treasurer of the Dunn Saddlery Company, and also junior member of the firm.

He was thirty-nine years of age and unmarried.

The friends of Major Dunn throughout West Texas will regret to hear of the sorrow that has overtaken him in the death of an only son.

Give Us An Oil Mill.

Tom Ball the well known Schleicher county stockman, was in San Angelo this week, and in conversation with a Press man said that San Angelo ought by all means to build a cotton seed oil mill. We are for anything and everything that will benefit our town and country, and we believe an oil mill would be a good paying investment and a good thing for the community. The increase in the value of the products of the cotton seed ought to pay for a mill in a year. This oil, the hulls and the meal denote a wonderful increase in value over the raw seed, and the meal is conceded to be much better feed for cattle than the seed. It looks as if some of our wealthy stockmen would organize a company and build a mill. It could certainly help out on the feed question.

Get your gasoline engine orders in at once. C. & G. Hagelstein Co. have already sold more than a car of the famous Fairbanks-Morse pumpers since January 1st, and are already getting crowded in erection. E. M. Baygent, the trapper, was in Monday disposing of his past month's catch of pelts, and called on the Press, to give an account of the number of the different species of "varmints" he has trapped and killed during the month. Thirty-one coyote and gray wolf hides; 63 skunks; 2 wild cat pelts; 6 coon skins and 10 possums, a total of 112 hides for the month, all captured on the Door Key ranch. Asked about Lobos, the trapper stated there were only two of them left in the neighborhood and their migrations cover such a wide territory, it is a difficult matter to capture them, but he will spend another month trying before he quits.

The boy was reported doing well yesterday, but he has a painful and more or less dangerous wound.
